HOW ODDS ACE COMPARES

CHECKED 5 OCTOBER 2026

There are good tools for Australian punters. Here's what Odds Ace does differently, and how it compares with services Australians are likely to look at, going by what each one says on its own website.

What Odds Ace does differently

- Measured against the US market itself. Every Aussie price is checked against 8 major US sportsbooks, the market that sets US sports lines. Most value tools measure against something else, such as a sharp offshore bookmaker, the Betfair Exchange or an average of bookmakers.
- Built only for US sports. NFL, NBA, NHL, MLB, college football and college basketball, including player props checked against US prop lines.
- Alerts come to you. There is no dashboard to keep refreshing. Each alert lands in a private Telegram channel with the Aussie price, the US fair price, the gap and why the price looks slow, and NFL, college football and NHL alerts also go to channels of their own.
- Weather in the same channel. Open-air NFL and MLB games get stadium wind and rain flags as posts of their own.
- Fully automatic. It scans around the clock, re-checks each price before the alert goes out, and lets members in and out of the channels by itself.
- Every alert published with its result. Wins and losses alike, on this site and in a free public Telegram channel.

At a glance

 Yes  Partly  No  Not mentioned on their website

	Odds Ace	Krok Odds	Betsnipер	Bookie Charity	WagerWise	BetBurger
Direct US line checks Aussie prices checked against the US sportsbooks themselves	 8 major US sportsbooks, margin removed	 The Betfair Exchange and sharp international prices	 The Australian average, a sharp offshore bookmaker or one you choose	 Major US bookmakers within a weighted average	 Its own "true probability"	 Its own model across 600+ bookmakers

We went by what each service says on its own website, checked on 5 October 2026. "Not mentioned" means we couldn't find it there, not that the service doesn't have it. Prices and features change, so check each site before you sign up. If anything here is wrong or out of date, email info@oddsaceaustralia.com and we'll fix it.

We also looked at Edge Alerter (racing and bonus-bet tips by Telegram), Aussie Punt and Bonusbank (arbitrage and matched-betting tools), and RebelBetting and Surebet (worldwide arbitrage scanners). We've left them out of the table because they're built for different things.

Personal and fully automatic, from sign-up to alerts

- You join on this site. Whop runs the secure checkout and your 3-day free trial.
- Your own invite arrives by email within 5 minutes. Personal links to the members' Telegram channels, one with every alert and one for each sport channel, made for your membership only.
- You tap Request to Join in Telegram. You're let in automatically, usually within a minute or two.

- Alerts come to you, 24 hours a day. Nothing to log in to, no dashboard to refresh and no settings to learn. Turn on notifications, or mute the channels when you want a break.
- You cancel on Whop whenever you like. When your membership ends, you're taken out of the channels automatically.

Nobody has to press a button for any of it. The scanning, the price re-checks, the alerts, the invites and the removals all run on their own, day and night.

The honest answer

As far as we can find, no other service available to Australians checks Aussie prices against the US sportsbooks themselves and sends stadium weather flags in the same channel. We looked at the services on this page on 4 and 5 October 2026. Some share part of the idea: Krok Odds uses venue weather in its projections, and Bookie Charity blends major US bookmakers into its fair price alongside Australian ones. But none we found does both, and that combination is what Odds Ace is built around.

What Odds Ace doesn't do: it doesn't cover AFL, NRL or racing, it doesn't look for arbitrage or bonus-bet offers, it doesn't let you set your own filters beyond choosing which channels to join (every member in a channel gets the same alerts), and it costs more than some of these tools. If those matter more to you, one of the services above may suit you better.
