FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Straight answers about how Odds Ace works, what you get and how to cancel. Can't find yours? Email info@oddsaceaustralia.com and we'll reply within one business day.

Is this a tipping service?

Not in the usual sense. Odds Ace doesn't predict results or promise wins. Each alert flags an Aussie price that hasn't caught up with the US market, and you decide whether to bet.

Is Odds Ace a bookmaker?

No. Odds Ace is an independent wagering-market analytics and information service. We don't accept or place bets, hold money or act for any bookmaker, and we don't take commissions, referral fees or any other payments from bookmakers. Bookmaker prices are shown for market comparison and analysis.

Who runs Odds Ace?

Tony Chalhoub, an Australian sole trader based in Melbourne. Odds Ace Australia is his registered business name, under ABN 38 722 496 289 (check it on ABN Lookup). Odds Ace isn't affiliated with or paid by any bookmaker: members' subscriptions are the only thing that pays for it. More about us.

Why do Aussie bookies follow the American market?

Far more is bet on these sports in America, so prices there move first. Australian bookmakers adjust after them, and for a while some Aussie prices still show the old line.

What does the gap in an alert mean?

It shows how much higher the Aussie price is than the US reference price: the US market's price with the bookmakers' margin removed. For example, if the US reference price is 1.65 and an Aussie bookmaker offers 1.80, the gap is +9.1% (1.80 ÷ 1.65 − 1). The bigger the gap, the further the Aussie price is behind the US market. For Betfair, an exchange, we use the price after its commission on winnings (6%), so it's a little lower than the price on Betfair's own screen. It's a price difference, not a profit: prices move fast, and you can still lose.

How do you work out the US reference price?

From the live prices at 8 major US sportsbooks. We take each book's margin out of its own prices, then use the median across the books on the same line, with a small correction for NFL player props, where US books price overs a little too short. An alert needs at least 3 US books on that line. If the US line is different from the Aussie one, the price at the Aussie line is estimated with a statistical model, starting from a US line at least 3 books quote. Most alerts need the Aussie price to be at least 12% above the US reference price (8% for unders); our method lists the exceptions. The Aussie price is re-checked just before the alert goes out. Read our method in full.

When does Odds Ace scan?

Around the clock: 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. When a gap shows up, it's re-checked and then posted in the members' Telegram channel. Prices move fast, so a price may have changed by the time you look.

How many alerts will I get?

It depends on which sports are in season and how much the US market is moving. Every alert we've sent is in the results on our home page, with the newest games first, so you can see how many go out. US games run overnight our time, so alerts come at all hours: mute the channel whenever you want a break.

Which bookmakers do you compare?

These 7 Australian-licensed bookmakers: TAB, Sportsbet, Neds, PointsBet, Unibet, Betr and Betfair. We compare them against 8 major American sportsbooks, which we don't name because they aren't licensed in Australia. Odds Ace isn't affiliated with or paid by any bookmaker, and their prices are shown for comparison and analysis only.

Why don't you check every Australian bookmaker?

We focus on the 7 Australian-licensed bookmakers above. In our experience, smaller bookmakers tend to move their prices faster, so they rarely stay behind the US market for long.

Do I need an American betting account?

No. You bet with your own Australian bookmaker, as you normally would. The American prices are only used as a reference.

How do alerts arrive?

In a private Telegram channel for members, Odds Ace Australia, which has every alert. Each alert starts with its sport, so it's easy to skip the ones you don't follow. Turn on notifications if you want each alert straight away, or mute the channel whenever you want a break, such as overnight.

Can I get alerts for only the sports I follow?

Not separately: every alert goes to the one members' channel, so everyone gets the same alerts. Each alert starts with its sport (NFL, NHL, college football and so on), so it's easy to skip past the ones you don't follow.

How do I get into the Telegram channel?

Within 5 minutes of starting your free trial, we email you a personal invite link. The email comes from info@oddsaceaustralia.com to the address on your Whop account, with the subject "Welcome to Odds Ace: your Telegram invite". If it's not in your inbox, check your junk, spam or promotions folder (and mark it "Not spam" so our emails reach your inbox), or search your email for "Odds Ace"; if it hasn't come within 10 minutes, email us. Open the link in Telegram and tap Request to Join, and you'll be let in automatically within a couple of minutes. The link is just for you and works for one Telegram account, so please don't share it. The same email explains, step by step, how to cancel. If your membership ends, you're taken out of the channel.

How do I pause or stop alerts?

To pause, mute the Odds Ace channel in Telegram (tap Mute at the bottom of the channel) and unmute whenever you like. To stop, cancel your membership (see How do I cancel?): no more payments are taken, and you're taken out of the channel at the end of your free trial or paid month. If you want a break from gambling or have self-excluded, cancel straight away in your Whop account and leave the Odds Ace channel in Telegram, which stops the alerts at once, and see Responsible gambling for free support.

Can bookmakers limit my account?

Yes. Any Australian bookmaker can limit or close an account at any time, including one that keeps taking prices it later moves, and it can void a bet at a price it treats as an obvious error, even after accepting it. Odds Ace can't stop that or promise it won't happen, but a few habits help:

- Use one fixed stake you can afford, and set a deposit limit with each bookmaker.
- Don't chase a price. If it has moved by the time you get there, let it go.
- Exchanges work differently. On the Betfair Exchange you bet against other punters, not the bookmaker, and Betfair takes a commission on winnings.
- Bet only from your own account. Using someone else's account, opening a second one or betting for anyone else is against bookmakers' terms, and they can void those bets.

- Know the warning sign. If a limit tempts you to bet more somewhere else, take a break. BetStop excludes you from every licensed Australian online and phone betting provider, and free, confidential support is on 1800 858 858.

What is the launch offer?

Members who join before 1 January 2027 pay the launch price of A$79 a month, and keep it for as long as their membership continues. From 1 January 2027, new members pay the standard price of A$99 a month. If your membership ends and you join again on or after 1 January 2027, the standard price applies. Both prices include GST.

Is my payment secure?

Payments go through Whop's secure checkout. We never see or store your full card number, and you can cancel online at any time.

Can I get a refund?

Cancel during your 3-day free trial and you won't be charged at all. After that, each payment covers a month and we don't refund part months: when you cancel, your access runs to the end of the month you've paid for. The exceptions are when we end your membership and you're not at fault, or when you cancel because we've cut back the service or changed our Terms in a material way. Your rights under the Australian Consumer Law always apply: see clauses 5 and 10 of our Terms.

How do I cancel?

Any time, online: sign in at whop.com, open Profile, then Orders, choose Odds Ace and select Cancel membership. Cancelling is self-serve: we don't cancel memberships by email. Access runs to the end of the month you've paid for. Cancel during your 3-day free trial and you won't be charged at all.

18+ only. Odds Ace is an independent wagering-market analytics service, not a bookmaker. It's information, not betting advice.
